If you really want to know exactly how the movie industry will be affected by the coronavirus, there's a friend for that. Movie Business Simulator offers a free and easy way to get an overview of the impact of a pandemic on your industry. First of all, this is not a simulation. Simulation is a game of chance that changes with the time. But this is a tool that changes based on the date, so the results can be trusted. It relies on data from the movie industry, which includes information about box office takings, earnings, earnings per-screen and revenue growth. By the time the virus spreads to more countries, the programme will present estimates for the next month, but you will still have to wait a few days for the exact figures to come in. You will be able to check the impact of coronavirus on the movie industry in different scenarios, such as the pandemic will last one week, four weeks, three months and six months and compare what's happening now to the predictions of the last month. This is a true-to-life simulator that lets you imagine what's going to happen if the virus mutates into different strains. The virus has an incubation period of five days on average, so the impact is gradual and spread across a period of time. As well as being able to understand the impact of the virus on the box office, the programme also lets you see the impact on the production and distribution of movies. The virus has a heavier impact on the latter, and this is because it affects the facilities such as the labs. Also, some experts expect that a movie will be released about every week for the time being, which will be a burden on the creative teams. As well as giving you a pretty-looking and easy-to-use interface, the simulator also comes with a useful
